

2321

The structure is a single-story house with a gabled roof. The exterior walls are made of light-colored wood siding, which is heavily weathered and peeling. The roof is made of dark, weathered wooden planks, with several missing or broken sections, particularly on the left side. A large, irregular hole is present in the side wall, exposing the interior. To the left of this hole is a window with a dark frame and a single pane of glass. Further left is a doorway with a concrete step leading up to it. The house is situated on a patch of ground with tall grass and some weeds.

A large, mature palm tree with long, thin, green fronds is positioned to the right of the house. The tree's fronds are dense and fan-like, partially obscuring the right side of the building. The ground around the base of the tree is covered in tall grass and some scattered debris.

The interior of the house is visible through the large hole in the wall. It appears to be in a state of disrepair, with debris scattered on the floor. A bed with a dark frame and some bedding is visible in the background. The walls inside are also made of wood, and the overall appearance is one of neglect and abandonment.

232